

Yolo County Foster Care Licensing Questions and Answers

Yolo County is in need of families that can provide care, mentoring and love for foster children. These children need to live away from their own families temporarily for a variety of reasons, such as illness or death of a parent, family break-up, severe neglect, physical or sexual abuse or chronic substance abuse of the primary family.

Why must foster homes be licensed?

California law requires that any home caring for a child must be licensed if the child is not closely related to the foster family. It provides protection of the children who must live apart from their parents.

Who Places Children in Yolo County?

Yolo County Department of Employment and Social Services, Probation or other counties can place children. Each child placed by the county has a social worker or probation worker. You, as the foster parents, will be expected to cooperate openly with the child's placement worker on problems and questions concerning the progress, development or welfare of the child. The plans for the child usually include visits from parents or relatives with arrangements for visits made through the child's worker.

Who are foster parents?

Foster parents are those persons who provide full-time care for up to six children who must temporarily be separated from their own families and cared for away from their homes. Every child needs care and guidance in a safe, clean, and comfortable home.

Foster parents should be:

- Over 18 years of age.
- In good health (determined by your physician).
- Without a conviction of a crime. (Other than a minor traffic violation and some types of criminal exemptions as stated by law.) Police records will be evaluated through State and FBI fingerprint checks.
- No substantiated allegation of Child Abuse, determined by the Child Abuse Index Check (CACI) and review of the State Child Welfare Service Case Management System.
- Able to meet their own needs financially.
- Every member of the family must be willing to accept a foster child as part of the family.

Who issues the license?

The California State Community Care Licensing division provides licensing services and issues the license. The licensing regulations are established in the Health and Safety Code and are supplemented by federal regulations.

How much information is required?

In order to approve your home as a foster family home, the licensing social worker needs to have facts about your home and family. These facts will pertain to:

- Your lifestyle, family, family members and relationships.
- Your home (size, number of rooms, sleeping arrangements, etc.)
- Your income and your household's income.
- Criminal background clearances.

The child welfare principle of the "Right Home for the Right Child" is used in order to place each child properly. It is expected and required that the Department of Social Services obtain all needed information to study and evaluate prospective foster parents and their homes before making the recommendations to issue the license.

What is the cost of securing a license?

No licensing fee is charged for the license of any home caring for six (6) or fewer foster children. However, there may be fees charged by other agencies; for example, law enforcement or Department of Justice agencies when they must complete criminal record history and Child Abuse Index clearances or training requirements needed for licensing.

Will I need a medical clearance?

A medical clearance will be required of both parents and any adult in the home. All members of the foster family must be in good health, both physically and mentally free from disabilities that would create problems for the care of foster children. The foster parents must be able to carry out the extra responsibilities of caring for foster children without harming them, their own health or the health and care of their family.

Other expectations:

Supervision: A foster child in your home needs full-time care and supervision, regardless of age. They must be under the general supervision of a reliable adult who has received clearance from Yolo County Licensing.

Discipline: Corporal punishment that includes spanking, striking, whipping, slapping or any other form of discipline that inflicts the child with physical pain is not allowed, even though the child's parents may have given consent. Disobeying this regulation is cause for the revocation of a foster home license.

Religious Beliefs: The religious beliefs of the child or his family must be observed and respected. Each child must be given the opportunity to attend religious services and activities of his or her faith or that of his or her parents, except where permission to do otherwise has been given by the parent.
